SINGLE & DOUBLE: We occasionally find some confusion about the exact definition of these terms as applied to lilacs. Any lilac is single if the individual florets contain only four petals. Because many single lilacs have exceptionally large and showy florets, as well as very large clusters, we always find visitors at our nursery who find it hard to believe that such beautiful and impressive varieties are actually "single." Double varieties have more than four petals in each floret; sometimes very many more than four. Varieties where the number of petals varies from floret to floret (Marechal Lannes is a good example) are called double also, even though some individual flowers in the cluster may have only four petals. Single and double are technical terms and in no way indicate an individual lilac's beauty.
